PORTLAND. Do you know just where Portland is? Very doubtful.

This country is getting so large, and the places of importance in it are becoming so of a mental map of its far-reaching territory granite mountains farther to the east than any other piece of land over which the flag waves. its surroundings. every morning to pry the sun over the horizon and open the day for the rest of their fellowcitizens of this Great Nation.

That stand like druids of old, with beards that rest rise as a great barrier between the rolling Atlantic and the rich valley of the mighty St. Lawrence, where lie the wealth and population of Canada. Close to the boundary line between Maine and New Hampshire runs a small river, called the Presumpscot, which empties into a beautiful island-dotted bay-the Casco. This bay is a magnificent harbor-land-locked and safe-and the river helps make a passageway across the rocky ridges to the interior of Canada. It is only 297 miles from Casco Bay to Montreal, while it is nearly three times that far from the great Canadian business center to the seaboard. by the way of the St. Lawrence.

This is one of the reasons for the growth of Portland on the banks of the Casco. The mouth of the St. Lawrence is usually regarded as the European front door of Canada, but the thriving little city on Casco Bay is a much more accessible one-especially in Winter time. when the St. Lawrence is filled with ice and the long lines of the Grand Trunk and Intercolonial Railways are blocked with sub-Arctic SDOWS.

of the city is one of those rare combinations of day the following bill of fare: natural beauty with natural advantages. The beauties of Portland have been sung by poets and descanted upon by romancists, led off by no less a master than Charles Dickens. Casco Bay's fresh blue waters are dotted by 365 rocky islands that raise their verdant crests above the waves like great emeralds in a shimmering zone of sapphire. In the midst of these, on a peninsula three miles in length and rising into two high hills, is built the trim, busy little city of Portland. Long piers thrust themselves out into the waters, ships flying the flags of all maritime nations rock in the waves, tall warehouses line the docks, and stately mansions of brick, marble and granite crown the hills. The streets are well paved and well kept, the buildings everywhere are in the best repair, and the people appear bright, quick stepping and well cared for. Away seaward, at the entrance of the bay, the hills swell into frowning forts that Gorham. more than once have withstood the fire of hostile fleets.

FRAGMENTS OF HISTORY. Portland has quite a history. The first settlement was made nearly 250 years ago. The Indians wiped it off the face of the earth two or three times, but, like truth crushed to earth, it rose again. By the time of the Revolution it had got to be a town of sufficient importance to be bombarded by the British fleet, which destroyed all but four of its houses. In the war of 1812 the British took another shy at it, but without doing so much damage. The famous battle between the American brig Enterprise and the British brig Boxer took place just outside the harbor. The American ship was victorious, but both Captains were killed, and now sleep side by side in the Portland Cemetery.

Portland was very patriotic during the war. It had men in the 1st, 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 19th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 17th, 19th, 20th, 25th, 29th, 30th, 32d infantry regiments, teries. In all she sent over 5,000 men to the with every bright-hued flag flying and bands field, of whom 421 were killed or died. Gen. Neal Dow, the great Prohibitionist, was her most prominent representative in the field. During the celebration of the 4th of July, 1866, a fire started from an exploding cracker, which swept away more than 1,800 buildings and destroyed more than $12,000,000 in property. The people set to work with characteristic energy to rebuild before the bricks were cool, and every building burned was soon replaced by a much better one. The city has now a population of about 36,000 and an assessed wealth of above $32,000,000. Its streets are lighted with gas and electricity, and supplied with pure water from Lake Sebago. It has 35 churches, 19 public schools, three daily and Portland put on her bridal robes to welcome the Encampment. The street decorations were nothing remarkable, the arches being few and neither expensive or distinguished for artistic conception and execution, but the hotels, offices and private houses were liberally embelished welcoming mottos.

"CAMP U. S. GRANT."

Certainly no more charming bivouac for soldiers was ever arranged than "Camp U. S. Grant." This was located on the eastern slope of Munjoy Hill, one of the two large eminences upon which Portland is built. The camp was any attempt to smuggle in liquors. Each was supplied with a good layer of clean straw and enough blankets to make sleeping comfortable, no matter how chill the east wind blew. The Department of Maine, as the hosts, Maine's rocky ribs, clothed with primeval | took the left of the line and gave the Western men the extreme right, from which the finest view was obtainable. And as the veterans looked off upon the glories before them, recalling the old days when flying shot and shell took away the beauty from such scenes, they fully realized the difference between the then and now, with peace reigning through the land and the Stars and Stripes waving over an undi-

In addition to the tents for the comrades there were a host of others for the headquarters, the sutlers, victualers, and other purveyors of comforts for the assemblages. Altogether, it looked like the veritable encampment of a large army. All the arrangements were as perfect as skill and experience and a generous outlay of money could make them. No rations were issued, but meals got up in the best style of Yankee cookery—than which there is no better on earth-were furnished at from 15 bread and butter, tea and coffee. The comrades from the interior of the country were delighted with the abundance and cheapness of sea-food, and indulged to their stomachs' content in clams in every style, fishchowder, lobsters, and all manner of fresh seafish. One keeper of a restaurant tent reported that he laid in for a beginning 17,000 lobsters, 150 bushels of clams, and other sea-food in proportion, only to find his stock running very low early on the second day. At this place were employed some 80 waiters, among whom were 30 students from Bates College and 25 from

Gen. Geo. I. Beal was the head of the committee upon the location of the camp and its general arrangements, and most efficiently did he do his work. His task was no slight one, as it was impossible to gain any accurate idea in advance of the number which might be looked for. In many cases the arrangements had to be changed after they were all completed, and it is not a little to Gen. Beal's credit that everything was in such perfect order and Sunday afternoon the comrades began to pour in over the Grand Trunk from the Northwest, and by rail and sea from the South. Many stopt at Old Orchard Beach,-a famous Summer resort a few miles from the city,-but there were enough entered the city before midnight to give the rather small hotels with which it is provided an overflowing appearance. But if they were overflowing Sunday night they were submerged by Monday noon. determined to have their sensibilities out-A constant river of people surged up town from he 1st cavalry, and the 1st, 5th, and 6th bat- all the depots and docks. Great ocean steamers flooding the dancing waves with stirring melodies, swept grandly in from the Atlantic, and disburdened themselves of masses of humanity, which, with a promptness that showed how well-remembered were the lessons of other years, formed into long lines, with banners and beating drums, and swept toward the city's center. The scenes were the same at the depots. The roads had the hardest work to get cars enough for all that wanted to come, and trains were sent along as fast as they could be made to follow. The incoming throng speedily made the streets too full to pass through with comfort. In the hotels men stood five and six deep in front of the offices clamoring for assignment to rooms, beds-anything which would give them an abiding-place. In the barber shop waiting for a shave was like waiting for a letter in the old camp days.

But there never was a better behaved crowd gathered in any place in the world. Everybody was very glad to see everybody else; everybody met old comrades whom he had not met den, and Israel Washburn, jr., were also natives for years; everybody had made on the journey pleasant acquaintances whom he wanted all his old friends to know; everybody was delighted with the magnificent and novel scenery; everybody looked forward to a profitable and pleasant meeting. Above all, they were all self-respecting, dignified men, who had taken up arms in support of law and order, and had given as well as received some stirring lessons with gay-colored bunting, flowers, flags and as to their value. Some of the people of Portland of little worldly wisdom got up a pother about what would happen when a crowd of soldiers "captured" the city. They expected dreadful things from a violation of the prohibition laws, and the papers contained several appeals—of questionable taste, to say the least -to the soldiers to report to the authorities are glad to welcome you to our city. We honor you as defenders of our flag. We learn that some men under the guise of the G.A.R. intend to introduce liquors into the city, to the disgrace of the citizens and the honorable members of the Grand Army. We would ask you to unite with us to protect the honor of the Grand Army and of our prohibitory city. Very respectfully, etc., J. B. Donnell, TIONAL ENCAMPMENT, G.A.R., others.

Gentlemen: Your note of this date was laid before the Executive Committee in session this after-noon, and by said committee I am directed to say in reply that, appreciating your efforts to promote sobriety and good order during the coming week, we beg to assure you that no association, committee or citizen can possibly have greater regard for the conduct of our comrades who are to visit Port-land than we cherish, being members of the organization ourselves.

So far as the Grand Army is concerned, we beg So far as the Grand Army is concerned, we beg to say there need be no apprehension. Having risked life, and many of them limb, to protect our homes from the hands of traitors, and as they are to be largely the guests of your city, they will not be likely in any way to do you harm. We are constantly in consultation with the Hon. Mayor of Portland and feel confident that he is fully prepared to bring to speedy justice any foolhardy specimen of humanity who should be idiotic enough to attempt to violate the law under the guise of bestowing favors upon the Grand Army of the Republic.

Whatever the members of the Grand Army may will not come clandestinely, but openly, and will not come clandestinely, but openly, and will not be used in violation of law.

We, therefore, respectfully submit if it will not be quite safe for you to trust all these matters pertaining to our organization to those in charge of its management. Very respectfully,

JAMES A. HALL,

When the Commander-in-Chief arrived at the beautiful little Lincoln Park he and his staff dismounted and took position on a stand erected for the purpose, while the procession marched by in review. The Commander found waiting him there Gen. John A. Logan, Gen. John C. Black, Hon. Frederick Robie, Governor of Maine; Gens. Slocum, Ames, Barnum, John C. Robinson, Amasa Cobb, Fairchilds, Thom, Hill, J. W. Burst, Gov. Alger, of Michigan; Hon. Thomas B. Reed, ex-Gov. Plaisted, and other distinguished men. Gen. Kountz's appearance on the stand was the signal for enthusiastic cheering, and the assembly would not be satisfied with bows, but insisted on a speech, which Gen. Kountz, at last, made, briefly and happily. The sight of Gen. Logan was the signal for a renewal of the applause. For three long hours the magnificent array marched past in solid ranks. It was a glorious pageant. Many of the Posts-especially Dahlgren Post, No. 2, of Boston, and Lynn Postwere drilled and uniformed in a way that would have done credit to crack militia com-

raged. EVENING ARRIVALS.

Commander-in-Chief Kountz arrived in the afternoon from Boston, with his staff and Dahlgren Post as his escort, and formally took posession of Headquarters. Gen. Logan and wife arrived about the same time, and were conducted to the elegant residence of Hon. Thos. B. Reed, whose guests they were during their stay in the city. Mrs. Sherwood's train was delayed so much that she did not arrive with her staff till nearly midnight. Her Headquarters had been previously established in the Falmouth House.

TUESDAY.

The Grand Parade-Procession Over Three Hours in Passing-Fully 25,000 Men in Line 40 Bands Discourse Sweet Music-Magnificent Display of the Veterans-Great Enthusiasm for John A. Logan -Reception to the Commander-in-Chief in the Evening.

Tuesday morning dawned rather chill and forbidding, and a little later a steady down-pour set in, which would have been very discouraging had not the Signal Bureau promised that there would be only "light local rains for New The comrades gathered in the hotels, in the different headquarters, and in the tents of Camp U. S. Grant, and put in the time very pleasantly and to the purpose. Before noon the clouds suddenly broke away and disappeared not to return, and the sun came out in glory. Then it was found that the rain was at the most opportune time and just what was needed. It laid the dust effectually, made the roads and streets as firm as well-laid pavements, and cooled the air just to the right temperature for the parade, which started before 12 o'clock.

Never in all the history of the Order was the street parade so imposing. The more general uniforming of the Posts, the taste and elegance of the uniforms, the attention paid to drills, and the increasing number of comrades in ranks all Portland, June 20, 1885.

Portland, June 20, 1885.

Ithe increasing number of comrades in ranks all tend to make these pageants yearly more impressive and interesting.
